Katmandu in the wake of last week's bomb attempt on King Mahendra's life by Nepali exiles based in India. The bombing, which was reportedly staged in defiance of exile leaders' orders by younger Nepali Congress party elements, was the first instance of violence against the leadership of either side in the year-long contest between Mahendra and the exiles. Mahendra can be expected to move against the exiled leaders' financial holdings in Nepal and to request their extradition from India, which he is scheduled to visit in March.

*USSR: Pravda's recent publication of statements by non-Soviet Communist leaders that war must be avoided at any cost is an implicit endorsement of the "Malenkov heresy" that both sides would be destroyed in a nuclear war. The standard Soviet line has been that despite enormous damage the Soviet Union and Communism would survive such a war. On 29 January Pravda published an interview by the chief editors of Pravda and Izvestia with Cuban Premier Fidel Castro in which Castro said that "peaceful coexistence is a correct strategy... inasmuch as it is necessary to avoid at any price a world atomic war" which would bring "catastrophic consequences to mankind." Castro's statement, made in Havana on 23 January, is similar to Italian Communist leader Togliatti's comment on the danger of mutual destruction in the event of world war--a comment Pravda printed on 24 January. These remarks go beyond any Soviet statement on the consequences of nuclear war since Malenkov enunciated his destruction-of-civilization line in 1954.

NOTE

[In the CIB of 29 January, the first sentence of the item entitled West Germany - West Berlin should read:]

[An influential West German newspaper, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, has accused US news agencies of irresponsibility in revealing the details of the tunnel escape of 28 East Berliners on 24 January and has charged US officials with complicity in leaking the story to the press.]
